05-16

his hand and then walked outside where he stood against the brick wall, smoking a cigarette. I understood right there my haircut was something that had been out of the power of the barber, and then I slowly walked outside to join the man. He looked down, smiled at me, and then he patted me on the top of my bald as a coot head. It