critics, is that they all came a minimum of thirty-one years after the events in question, and in many cases were recounted more than forty years after the fact. Not only are memories this old of dubious reliability, they were also subject to contamination from other accounts the witnesses may have been exposed to.