09-16

investors, ruined by the fall in prices, were desperate, and Dutch commerce suffered a severe shock. In Mackay's account, the panicked tulip speculators sought help from the government of the Netherlands, which responded by declaring that anyone who had bought contracts to purchase bulbs in the future could void their contract by