and other neurobehavioral problems that Tourette's commonly co-occurs with. An important role in Tourette's gene expression is played by the sex of the person. In particular, males affected by the gene are more likely to have tics, and females who have a genetic predisposition are more likely