condition, which was that he should be king who could go the deepest into the earth. So the little bird who the other birds despised was now back to square one. Confident, he remained, however, that if he played his cards right, he could be king. How the goose wallowed in the sand, and the duck strove to dig a hole for the new task!